UPDATE ON BALTIC SEA DISC

The Daily Mail reported in June that the strange disc-shaped object found on the bed of the Baltic Sea, mentioned in a recent Amskaya, could be more unusual than originally thought:

Sceptics expected that a deep-water dive would debunk the slew of extra-terrestrial theories surrounding an unidentified object sitting at the bottom of the Baltic Sea. But the Swedish expedition team that took the plunge surfaced with more questions than answers - and certainly no solution to its origins.

The divers found that the object, which some have likened to Millennium Falcon because of its unusual round outline, was raised about 10 to 13ft above the seabed and curved in at the sides, giving it a mushroom shape. The Swedish diving team noted a 985-foot flattened out 'runway' leading up to the object, implying that it skidded along the path before stopping but no true answers are clear.

The object which has a 60-meter diameter is said to be raised about 10-13 feet off the seabed and the divers compared it to the shape of a mushroom. They added that the object has 'rounded sides and rugged edges'

'First we thought this was only stone, but this is something else,' diver Peter Lindberg said in a press release. At the center of the object, which has a 60-meter diameter, has an 'egg shaped hole leading into it from the top'. Surrounding the hole, they found a strange, unexplained rock formation. Adding fuel to the speculative fire, they said that the rocks looked 'like small fireplaces' and the 'stones were covered in something resembling soot'. 'Since no volcanic activity has ever been reported in the Baltic Sea the find becomes even stranger,' Mr Lindberg continued.

'As laymen we can only speculate how this is made by nature, but this is the strangest thing I have ever experienced as a professional diver.' The soot also proved cause for concern for Mr Lindberg's colleague on the Ocean X explorer team, Stefan Hogeborn. 'During my 20-year diving career, including 6,000 dives, I have never seen anything like this. Normally stones don't burn,' Mr Hogeborn said in the release. 'I can't explain what we saw, and I went down there to answer questions, but I came up with even more questions.'

Another find that they saw in person for the first time was the 985-foot trail that they described 'as a runway or a downhill path that is flattened at the seabed with the object at the end of it'. The object was first found this month last year, but because of a lack of funding and bad timing, they have were not able to pull a team together to see for themselves - just the strange, metallic outline, and a similar disk-shaped object about 200 metres away. As it was before the recent dive, the story behind the object is anyone's guess.

'We've heard lots of different kinds of explanations, from George Lucas's spaceship - the Millennium Falcon - to "it's some kind of plug to the inner world," like it should be hell down there or something,' Mr Lindberg said. Speaking to Fox News, he said: 'We don't know whether it is a natural phenomenon, or an object. We saw it on sonar when we were searching for a wreck from World War I. This circular object just turned up on the monitor. While the Ocean Explorer team is understandably excited about their potentially earth-shattering find, others are slightly more sceptical and are questioning the accuracy of the sonar technology. In the past, such technology has confused foreign objects with unusual - but natural - rock formations. Part of the trouble they face, however, is that they have no way of telling what is inside the supposed cylinder - whether it is filled with gold and riches or simply aged sediment particles. They're hoping for the former, and history seems to be in their favour.

The Baltic Sea is a treasure trove for shipwreck hunters, as an estimated 100,000 objects are thought to line the cold sea's floor. The company have created a submarine that they hope will appeal to tourists and wannabe shipwreck hunters who will pay to take a trip down to the bottom of the Baltic Sea to see for themselves. <http://www.dailymail.co.uk/sciencetech/article-2160297/Pictured-The-UFO-shaped-object-the-Baltic-Sea--covered-soot-little-fireplaces-lying-end-1-000ft-runway.html#ixzz1yEQF4xz7>

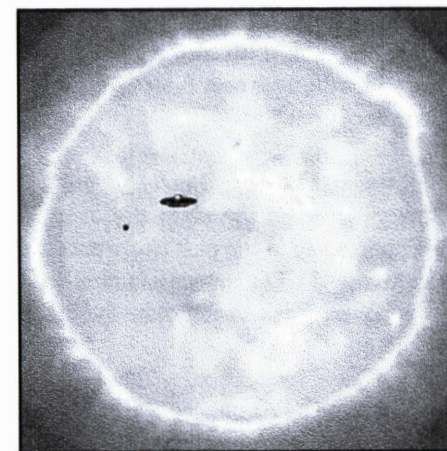

Sightings at transit of Venus

There are two apparent sightings of strange objects at the recent transit of Venus (the rare phenomenon of the planet crossing the face of the sun) on YouTube, though there are not very many details given:

In this video apparently taken by Chinese astronomers, seemingly on time-lapse, both the object and the planet can be seen moving across the face of the sun, but the planet overtakes the object.

Transit of Venus & Incredible Sighting 2012 AMAZING - ISS?

Published on 6 Jun 2012 by leokimvideo
Amazing & rare video capture in so many ways! A transit of Venus across the Sun takes place when the planet Venus passes directly between the Sun and Earth. This event is also known as Venus Transit. After checking my video footage I made an alarming UFO discovery. Possibly a Chinese spy satellite or secret military hardware spacejunk. I'm sure NASA will know! Pretty obvious we are not alone!

Sightings in Basingstoke area in May

Numerous sightings of unusual flashing lights in the night sky were reported over Basingstoke last Thursday. Postman Ron Brooker, 57, of Timor Road, Popley, saw the lights after leaving a quiz night with five friends at the Recreation Hall, in Old Basing. He said: "It was after dark around 10.30pm when we saw a dull white light flickering up in the sky and moving slowly right to left, and then left to right. It was up there for about 10 minutes and could still be seen when we arrived at our home in Popley."

Two friends in the Brighton Hill area were in a back garden in Porter Road, when Kayley Parker's dog, Zena, started barking, alerting them to the strange lights which were moving slowly forwards and backwards in the skies over Down Grange. Amy Waissen, 20, of Beechwood Close, Hatch Warren, was at friend Kayley's house, in Porter Road, and said: "I don't usually believe in UFOs but we definitely saw something up in the sky just after 10pm. The lights were green and moving slowly backwards and forwards for 10 minutes."

A student from Yateley, Sophie Tottman, 22, saw a cigar-shaped light in cloudy skies over Fleet. She said: "I was driving in Fleet with a friend when we saw a long pale yellow light just above the trees near Fleet bends. It was moving left to right slowly for about 10 minutes just after 10pm."

Sightings at Blue Springs, Missouri, USA

Strange lights in the night sky over Blue Springs have UFO investigators interested. Neighbors say in the past two weeks they have seen multi-colored lights in the sky, and the Missouri UFO Network is now conducting its own investigation. The video of these orbs hovering is causing quite the debate in Blue Springs and is the topic of discussion in the quiet suburb.

Robert Kover first noticed it two weeks ago and went down to get a closer look. He was confronted by a neighbor who thought he was spying on women, until he handed her his binoculars.

"I showed her the star that was in the sky, just to get somebody else's perspective on it, and they said they had never seen anything like it before," Kover said. Becky Neely said it was vibrating red, green and blue lights. "It was like nothing I've ever seen before, but with binoculars we could see it fairly well, and it was off in the distance," Neely said.

Teresa Price saw it twice. The first time was the same night Kover and Neely did, and she noticed it again when she was walking her dogs the following week. However, the second time things were even more bizarre. "It was up in the sky and then it just dropped and stayed stationary in that lower position," Price said. Price watched KCTV5's report earlier this month on domestic drones that are now being used by local governments and law enforcement agencies, and thought that was what it was. "It kind of made me think that there is some sort of drone out there. Why is it out at night? I don't know," Price said.

Kover called the KCTV5 Investigative Hotline and posted a sighting on a UFO spotters website. The night of an interview, KCTV5's Dave Jordan spotted similar sightings. Kover was contacted by Margie Kay with the Missouri UFO Network, who decided to investigate for herself the following night. Kay interviewed everyone who claimed to have seen the UFOs and then set up telescopes to watch the sightings herself. Neighbors came out hoping to see the activity that captivated the community.

As the sky darkened, one of them appeared. Kay initially dismissed it. "I am 90 percent sure we are looking at Vega in this instance, and there are some other planets out right now," said Kay. But she came to a different conclusion after others started appearing. And after she put in a call to a colleague to take a look at what she thought was Vega, that person described it as pure white.

"That is not what we are seeing. We're seeing colors in this. I see green in this one and in the other I see red, green and blue," Kay said. "I don't think it's a planet at this point. I don't know what it is. It's unidentified."

KCTV5 contacted Blue Springs police, and they have said they haven't received any calls about this. KCTV5 also contacted NORAD, and a spokesman said that he did hear about a similar sighting, but he wasn't sure if it was in Missouri because that division of NORAD monitors the entire Midwest.

Somerset UFO

Two RAF Typhoon jets that rocked five counties with their sonic boom were at the centre of a UFO riddle in April. The scrambled warplanes were seen intercepting a mystery object hovering over Somerset.

Dad-of-three Richard Bird, 38, told how the supersonic jets probed the strange sock-shaped entity above his garden in Bath. He said: "They were having a really good look." Fellow local Sean Whyte described the UFO as "white and rocket-shaped". Another witness said: "The jets kept circling it. It was very strange."

The Met Office last night said in the wake of the Typhoons being scrambled on Thursday that the object was not a weather balloon.

Famed NASA Astronaut confirms Extraterrestrials are here by Clark C. McClelland, former ScO, U.S. Space Shuttle Fleet, KSC, Florida 1958 to 1992

Space Shuttle Columbia, the shuttle that was later to break up on re-entry, during earlier flight STS-80 took a crew of five astronauts into a 17 day, 15 hour and 54 minute mission around the earth, the longest flight in the history of this vehicle. During this lengthy flight a very strange event occurred that even had crewman Dr. Story Musgrave unable to explain what he observed from the shuttle windows.

A large disc shaped object appeared below the Columbia. The shuttle was approximately, 190 Nautical miles high.

The disc was first observed to miraculously appear from out of nowhere, flying through the clouds below and progressing from right to left as the astronauts stared in utter amazement. The outer rim of the craft appeared to be rotating counter-clockwise. It was very large (compared to common space junk and breakaway ice), approximately 50 to 150 feet in diameter.

Astronaut Dr. Story Musgrave, a Payload Specialist on the STS-80 Mission, was interviewed following the flight. As he viewed a videotape of the incident which showed lightning flashes in the atmosphere, the city lights of Denver, Colorado and other earthbound sights, he stated: "I don't know what it is. Whether it's a washer, debris, ice particles, I don't know. But it's characteristic of the thousands of things which I've seen. What is not so characteristic is it appears to come from nowhere. You would think that if it's facing the dark side or facing a side towards you which is not reflecting the sun, you would think that you would see something there. It's really impressive."

During an earlier interview, Dr. Musgrave stated he attempted to communicate with ET life forms during each of his six missions. He actually asked them to take him with them. Now that's an astronaut with a lot of courage. Dr. Musgrave retired after this flight from NASA. Since then he's been spreading his considered opinion that alien life exists. When Musgrave speaks of this, it's no great leap for one to assume he's admitting knowledge of alien life. As the final slide of a "Grey" ET was shown during a recent astronomy presentation by Dr. Musgrave, he made this surprising comment: "These guys are real... I guarantee it!" Dr. Musgrave does know the truth. This author guarantees it!

Consider that carefully. These are world renown scientists making statements almost beyond belief. Dr. von Braun and others of his stature have the courage to disclose "sensitive" information, but obviously the leaders of the USA and the world do not. If billions could find a way of coping with the overwhelming threat of atomic annihilation for half a century, it is reasonable to assume we can cope with the knowledge of these "Other Intelligence's" from the stars. We can cope with the fact they are visiting earth, and have been since the beginning of history. We must. Those still asleep must open their eyes. We Are Not Alone.

MARS TRACK SYSTEM AND WATER

by Joseph Skipper

This report is about evidence drawn from Google Mars brought to my attention by viewer Mark Wells. Note that coordinates are given on each image to facilitate verification in Google Mars.

Note in order that the 1st thru 4th images are of some possible civilization evidence in the form of a transport system on the Mars surface. Second will be the 5th thru 6th images of evidence of surface water in a liquid state in a crater system and finally a single 7th image showing a wide-angle context view relationship that both of these different evidence sites have with being in the vicinity of the now famous Hale Crater site and its civilization evidence. So here we go.

The 1st image demonstrates the wide-angle context scene of the track system, at least what is available for us to see. Understand that, in my opinion, both the brownish color field on the left and the gold color field on the right are heavily obfuscated with smudge image tampering layered in with the false color leaving out mostly just the largest terrain forms. The point is that there is likely a lot in this scene that is hidden from our view that could have made the very limited evidence that we can see even more informative but that is way it goes in this imaging.

The most obvious evidence in the above 1st image is the arrow straight track or transport system pointed out by the dual split arrows and text label. Note that the track system comes out from under the edge of the gold color obfuscation field in the lower right of center part of this image. This track system extends diagonally up across the brownish field to the upper left and into some rough depression terrain near the top of the image where it terminates. In fact there even appears to be a directionally pointed object on the track system near image center as pointed out by the single arrow and label.

The 2nd image offers a closer view of the mid area of the track/transport system and the object that appears to be traveling on it. Note that the object appears in this resolution compromised imagery to have a pointed end on the left and is casting a shadow to its right. However, the darkness on the object's right side may be an illusion created by obscuring smudge treatments as is the pitted sectional look to the track system itself.

Why do I say that? Well because most of the field to the left of the track is smudge with a rougher pattern to it and the field on the right with a smoother pattern to it seems to be yet more smudge. Both of these smudge fields thoroughly hide the true terrain from our view and anything that might be there. So any shadow cast to the left of the object may for the most part be covered over and hidden by the rougher textured smudge field. Further, the smudge from both of these fields crosses at very regular 90° intervals across the track system literally creating the pitted sectional look that may not be real.

In my opinion, there is some kind of track or transport system present here but it is wider than what we can actually see. I suspect that all of the whole left length of it is hidden under the rougher texture smudge and most of it is hidden on the right although some is still revealed there as well. I think that all of what we are seeing here is essentially the center areas of the track system and that the whole system width is wide enough to allow objects to pass each other with clearance in their goings and comings.

Now this kind of speculation begs the further question of why didn't the image tampering just cover up the track system completely and be done with it? I suspect this has to do with the artificial intelligence (AI) running the tampering program and its programming limitations rather than a human. I suspect the AI used the straight line of the track system to develop two different smudge fields on the two sides with different patterns that meet at the straight line track system but cannot cross over and merge with each other and therefore completely cover the track system. This is a AI application pattern flaw that I've seen in a lot of the image tampering dating back over the years.

I suspect that this is an elevated track system because it is mostly arrow straight and unaffected by variations in the terrain ups and downs. I suspect that the elevation is enabled by supports at regular intervals and that the AI can see these very clearly in the much higher resolution imaging it works with (not the sorry mess we are eventually fed here) and thus the need to cross over the tracks precisely at such regular intervals to hide the supports with smudge treatments. Any shadows cast by the elevated system would be hidden under the smudge treatments that snug up against either side of the transport system along its length.

This process to be so precisely done right on the boundary line (the track system) between two separate tampering fields is very difficult for the AI to accomplish. Such precise obfuscation work is enhanced by working with very precise military level resolution not admitted to but then still hindered by not being able to merge the two different tampering fields fully crossing over all of the evidence. The result is that a limited amount of anomalous evidence is still left out for us to see here.

The above 3rd image offers a closer view of the south end of the track system where it disappears under the gold color obfuscation field. As you can see, the introduction of the gold field strip completely eliminates the track system visuals and there is no attempt at continuation of the brownish field terrain features crossing over in the gold field. In my experience, this is typical of the very heavily obfuscated ESA false color imaging.

The above 4th image offers a closer view of the north terminating end of the track system down in the rough terrain depression area. As you can see, much of the evidence here is selectively outright covered up by smudge treatments of various kinds. There is some indication that an extension of the track system curves up to the right toward the two structures with the red stars on them. Otherwise, most of this evidence in this depression is either outright selectively hidden by smudge and/or seriously compromised by poor resolution. Now let's move on to the water evidence below.

Now note how arrow straight what we can see of this transport system is in the 1st image with the wide-angle context view before the track heading at an angle south disappears under the gold color layer. If one places a straight ruler on the straight track extending its south direction, that extended line bypasses other larger craters and bisects the smaller crater water evidence site imaged below some 900 km or 560 miles distant. Of course this may just be coincidental. After all, this transport system may be only a small portion of a larger industrial network better hidden under the false gold color layer.

The above 5th image with its wide-angle context view demonstrates the location of this crater water evidence site just to the right of center in the image. As you can see, other craters around this one are also suggestive of being water sites in this more distant view and probably are. However, most of these are more visually compromised by the combination of false color and smudge that carpet this entire strip and are therefore less revealing when examined closer.

However, as you can see in the above 6th image closer view of the crater water site, the surface water in a liquid state evidence is very strong in this crater. Note the very pronounced leveling effect of the water surface all around the interior of the dual impact crater creating a shoreline on both crater's interior walls, all at the same level. Note also the clarity and transparency of the water revealing the crater bottom geological features beneath the surface. It is hard for evidence to get more obvious than this.

The clarity of the water in spite of the gold color smudge application on it suggests that this water is likely even more visually clear and transparent than this. That in turn along with the nearby other self leveling crater water evidence suggests that this is likely spring fed aquifer water and represents the underground water table in this locale filtered by the ground soil.

Truthfully, it just doesn't get much better than this. In fact, we can probably thank this site's water extreme clarity for overcoming the smudge treatments that would have normally left a grainy pattern on the water surface identified by us as visual haze compromising identifying it as water. In this case, the haze is very fine not sufficiently compromising the water whereas at the other sites the grain is more pronounced and likely reflecting the presence of more sediment suspended in the water.

As for the surrounding terrain, don't place much confidence in those visuals as it is mostly carpeting color smudge treatments hiding what ever may be there under them that might be considered normal size like the track system. Also of interest is this water site's relatively close proximity to the Hale Crater likely industrial civilization evidence site as per my Report #084 on it just 119 km or 74 miles away to the left or east.

The above 7th image provides a more distant wide-angle view of all of these evidence sites and their physical location relationship to each other. I suspect these bits and pieces of evidence that we can see are indicative of industrial operations as opposed to residential type civilization evidence sites. In fact, it is possible that what I have referred to as a track system here is in fact a partially hidden more substantial conduit transport system that conveys a raw resource (water?) from point A to point B that also serves as a transport system for industrial and/or other vehicle traffic.

However, of particular importance is the fact that the crater water site reported on here is surface water in a liquid state. I have reported on this type of evidence a number of times both here at the website and with even stronger evidence in my book. There is enough of this kind of evidence to indicate that this is not geothermal warmed water but natural surface water in a liquid state with the implication that the Mars atmospheric temperature cannot be as cold or as dry as officially portrayed.

At some point this kind of evidence and its implications is going to have to be taken into consideration by the academic and science communities and they are going to have to start raising questions about the most basic of the science data that is suppose to be coming from Mars. Let's face it, instrument data like temperature is the easiest to tamper with and alter. Further, it is the most readily believed and accepted of the data and here's a thought, someone here on Earth or on Mars readily knows this.

That means that a secrecy agenda here on Earth could easily falsify this most basic of data and it be very readily accepted. Likewise, if Mars is occupied by someone with advanced technology but we here on Earth refuse to take this into consideration, a little frozen nitrogen placed in proximity to Earth equipment sensors would provide long term false readings fitting a secrecy agenda on Mars. Just because Earth instrument data says that Mars is extremely cold does not make it a reality. Let's face it, either someone here on Earth and/or someone on Mars could easily influence the computer programming to this end.

The point is that, from the scientific, to the government, to the population point of view, we need to be taking the data stream being received from Mars and other planets with caution and asking hard questions regarding it rather than just swallowing the too readily accepted norm wholesale without question. Just because evidence like that presented here conflicts with the accepted norm is reason enough to grow more determined to investigate further with an open mind and not just dismiss contrary evidence.

The truth is that the visual satellite imaging evidence supports both the accepted norm as well as conflicting with that norm. As long as that is the case, we cannot say with confidence that we know anything at all until we get to the bottom of this problem and determine objectively where the reality is. Dismissing anything in favor of preconceived ideas just makes us as clueless as a fence post and candidates for the dunce cap.

THE HIDDEN UNITY and BEGINNINGS

The Hidden Unity looks at the strange phenomenon of subconscious siting of ley points, and notes that places of worship, of all religions and all ages, tend to predominate on leys. The environmental and philosophical implications of this are discussed, and the apparent necessity of worship but irrelevance of doctrine. Two ley centres are given as examples, and investigated in depth - the Shah Jehan Mosque in Woking and the Guru Nanak Sikh Temple, Scunthorpe. There is an appendix by Eileen Grimshaw on the significance of the Pagan religion to this study. Illustrated with photographs, maps and line drawings. £2 plus 30p p&p from the Amskaya address. Please make cheques payable to J. Goddard.

Beginnings is about a series of potentially useful discoveries, mainly made by Jimmy Goddard over a period of about twenty years, but having some overlap with discoveries made by others. For various reasons, the investigations are all in their early stages, and some have not been continued. They include earth energy detection, natural antigravity, subconscious siting, ley width, and the solar transition effect. There is also a chapter on cognitive dissonance - a psychological factor which seems to have been at the root of all bigotry - scientific, religious and other - down the ages. The booklet is concluded with an account of the discovery of leys by Alfred Watkins. £2 plus 30p p&p from the Amskaya address. Please make cheques payable to J. Goddard.

EARTH PEOPLE, SPACE PEOPLE

In 1961, Tony Wedd produced a manuscript Earth Men, Space Men, detailing many claims of extraterrestrial contact. It was never published, and I had thought it was lost, though it has recently been located - Tony had given it to Timothy Good. To try to make up for the loss in a much more modest size, this booklet was prepared. As well as giving details of some of the more prominent contact claims, there are articles on the history of the STAR Fellowship and some of its personalities, evidence for life in the Solar System and investigation into extraterrestrial language.

THE LEGACY OF TONY WEDD

This CD-ROM is an electronic form of the travelling exhibition Tony planned, using his voice, writing, photographs and drawings to illustrate his research and findings in the fields of flying saucers, landscape energies and lost technology.
